

enepath partners with Solgari to strengthen existing front, middle and back office voice trading solution

London, June 15, 2017 – Solgari, the global provider of the world's first complete enterprise cloud business communications solution, has today announced its partnership with enepath, the voice trading and communications specialist. The partnership will enable enepath to integrate Solgari's business communication software services – specifically SIP trunking and DDI telephony – to its front and back office trading solutions.

Access to Solgari's global cloud unified communications will strengthen enepath's existing back office solution to more efficiently connect the front, middle and back office departments without the need for PBXs at a carrier level.

Solgari is the only global cloud business communications vendor that delivers business telephony, call & video conferencing, desktop sharing, contact centre, IVR, call archiving, call encryption, PCI DSS compliance and carrier requirements through an integrated software platform. Customers pick and choose the services they require, where and when they need them, on-board in days, and save cost compared to other systems.

enepath is the complete voice trading solution specialist for today's traders, transforming the way people implement and manage the use of voice inside and outside the trading room. It focuses on Software as a Service rather than on proprietary hardware and capital deployment for today's traders who want high functionality, mobility, agility, reliability and flexibility on a global scale.

Solgari's global cloud business communications solution is of particular value to enepath as it enables the company to create global numbering from the cloud, providing a single global desk for companies to increase business efficiency without any time zone constraints.

"Providing a resilient and effective end-to-end voice trading solution is what we strive for as a company and, as such, we continually look to improve upon what we have already created," said Gavin Davis, CEO, enepath. "In this regard, the well-respected Solgari is a natural fit. In partnering with them we have solidified our offering from front to back office, and we are pleased with the benefits this will give our customers, both existing and future."

"enepath is leading the way in voice services for trading rooms, and we're delighted that this partnership will enable the company to provide a more solid offering to the traders using its services," said John Colgan, CEO, Solgari. "There is a great synergy between our two companies, both believing firmly in giving our customers an excellent service with a low total cost of ownership. We look forward to a strong future together."
